Football fakes attempt swindle

Orem police reported Tuesday that two males claiming to be BYU football players came into the Washburn Isuzu dealership at 1635 S. State in Orem and attempted to sell fraudulent plane tickets to sales representatives at the dealership.

Lt. Bob Conner, spokesman for the Orem Police Department, said one of the men identified himself as Troy Briner.

Sam Dark, a sales representative at Isuzu and a BYU student, said the individuals came into the dealership twice on Tuesday asking him to help the BYU football program by purchasing the round-trip tickets. They explained that for each ticket they sold they would receive a $75 commission to use toward their school expenses.

Dark said they claimed the tickets are being sold at such a good deal — $500, round-trip to Hawaii — because a wealthy man who wants to help football players bought the tickets and is allowing the players to sell them for commission.

The deal sounded too good to be true, and Dark did some checking before agreeing to the purchase the tickets.

"While they were here trying to get another salesman to buy a ticket, we called the BYU athletic department and found out that there was no way this was sponsored by BYU," Dark said.

Dark also discovered from his phone call that Briner is not a football player at BYU.

The individuals claimed that the $500 fee included two first-class tickets on America West Airlines and hotel accommodations for six nights and seven days at the Hilton in Hawaii.

"America West Airlines does not fly to Hawaii," said Patty Nowack, spokeswoman for the airline.

The man identifying himself as Briner asked Dark to make the check out to him. When Dark and his associate refused to make the check out to him personally, the individuals left the dealership.

"The guy got really upset and left," Dark said.

Strong community support for BYU and the football program may be one of the reasons why they chose to represent themselves as players — to lend credibility, Dark said.

"Our athletes don't get involved in fund-raising activities outside the

On the sesquicentennial agenda for next year, one of the major events during the year-long celebration will be a re-enactment of the original wagon-train trek into Provo.

"There will be 30 wagons representing the 30 original families that (first) came down (into Provo)," Henderson said.

Descendants of the original families that entered Provo are encouraged by the Provo Sesquicentennial Committee to contact them as soon as possible.

"We'll start at the fairgrounds in Salt Lake. Each night there will be an encampment of history and folklore and activities," Henderson said.

Henderson also said community members not participating in the trek itself can go to the different activities at the encampments each night.

The trek will take three days, and the committee will allow people to walk alongside the wagons, Henderson said.

"(We want) people to be aware of what's going to be going on and get some excitement going. Then we need lots of volunteers and lots of help for next year," she said.

Other sesquicentennial activities planned for next year include the "Lasting Legacy Program," where Provo residents will be asked to share their written and oral histories.

Republican disharmony delays bill

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House Appropriations Committee put off consideration of a foreign spending bill Wednesday because of disagreements among Republicans about whether to provide $18 billion for the International Monetary Fund.

As a result, the Clinton administration's request to replenish IMF funds — a politically sensitive issue pitting IMF reformers against pro-business lawmakers concerned about the Asian financial crisis — might be delayed until September, just ahead of elections.

Louisiana Rep. Bob Livingston, R-La., chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, and House Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., agreed late Tuesday to put off the $12.6 billion foreign operations bill for 1999 and related IMF matters until Republicans can reach consensus on whether to support full funding.

The bill, as approved by the House Appropriations foreign operations subcommittee, had $3.4 billion for the IMF, but some members of the committee want to add $14.5 billion in credit that the administration has requested.

Livingston, who supports $18 billion for the IMF conditioned on reforming the way it operates, told GOP leaders he couldn't "in good conscience" send the foreign operations bill to the House without voting on IMF in committee first, something that could create problems for GOP critics.

"I tend to sympathize with the argument that the IMF is not up to snuff," Livingston said. "But I also agree with the argument that we've got an Asian crisis, we've got a Russian crisis and that deferring IMF funding again this year would send a psychological message to the world that America is retreating within its borders and becoming more isolationist."

Livingston expressed hope that internal GOP objections will be overcome and the full bill will be approved when it comes up again in September.

Treasury Secretary Robert Rubin said "it is imperative for our economy" that Congress swiftly approve IMF funding, but he expressed confidence the money would be approved in the end.

Although some GOP leaders back $18 billion for the IMF, House Majority Leader Dick Armey, R-Texas, has promised an all-out effort to fight full funding because of alleged IMF mismanagement. "It would come to the floor under the most rigorous terms of contest," Armey said Monday.

Senators, who have approved $18 billion for the IMF, have pledged just as strongly to overcome House objections and ensure Congress provides the money.

"If the global economy goes sour, our economy will go sour," Sen. Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, who chairs the Senate Appropriations Committee, said Tuesday. "This is an international commitment the United States must keep."

Universities cut classes for Games

SALT LAKE CITY — Students at Weber State University and the University of Utah will have plenty of time to watch the 2002 Winter Games when they arrive.

WSU announced that it is joining the U of U in canceling school during the first three weeks of February 2002.

"For some, the Games represent a significant time for employment. For others, it's a chance to volunteer and attend events," said WSU President Paul Thompson. "We recognize the widespread interest and want to make sure everyone can be part of it."

Classes at WSU will be held from Jan. 2 to Feb. 1, then reconvene on Feb. 27 after a modified Spring Break.

Other area colleges may do the same.

"The faculty senate and the whole college community is looking at the possibility of using the same schedule as the University of Utah," said Marjorie Carson, academic affairs vice president for Salt Lake Community College. "We still have a few more procedures to go through."

Utah Valley State College and BYU have no plans to change.

I-15 road work ahead of schedule

SALT LAKE CITY — Cars may not be moving very fast on Interstate 15, but construction crews are.

The four-year, 17-mile reconstruction project which began in April 1997 is 36 percent complete in 28 percent of the time expected for the project.

Lead contractor Wasatch Constructors expects to finish the work by July 2001, ahead of the projected October 2001 date.

The coming months will bring changes to the road, said Wasatch Constructors spokesman Brian Mauldwin, including the closure of the I-15 southbound to the I-80 westbound interchange until the spring of 2001.

Once the ramp is closed, the contractor will begin bridge demolition.

Other closures are expected to be announced later this week.

Sometime early in the fall, the southbound onramp and offramp at 4500 South will open, and southbound ramps at 5300 South will close.

The first major interchange to open this year will be at 600 North.

IRS law will make agency 'friendly'

WASHINGTON — President Clinton, who once opposed congressional action to overhaul the Internal Revenue Service, Wednesday signed into law a bill designed to mold the agency into a friendlier, fairer tax collector.

Clinton said the new law "will give the American people what they deserve," including more responsiveness on the part of the IRS and more flexibility in filing their tax returns.

The legislation makes many changes, although experts say relatively few will have a major impact on most taxpayers.

A nine-member board — including six private citizens — will oversee IRS operations, but could not intervene in individual cases.

Agency employees would be fired for covering up mistakes. The commissioner could also hire up to 40 people at salaries up to $175,400, the same as the vice president.

The agency will have to explain why it denies a person's refund, provide the phone number of the IRS worker handling each case, and list phone numbers of local IRS offices in telephone directories.

'Father Knows Best' actor dies Tues.

LOS ANGELES — Robert Young, loved by millions of viewers as television's all-knowing dad on "Father Knows Best" and as the compassionate "Marcus Welby, M.D.," died Tuesday evening in his home. He was 91.

His physician, Dr. John Horton, said Young suffered from heart problems.

"Though we never socialized off the set, we were together every day for six years, and during that time he never pulled rank (and) always treated his on-screen family with the same affection and courtesy he showed his loved ones in his private life," said Jane Wyatt, Young's "Father Knows Best" costar.

Young won two Emmys for "Father Knows Best" and a third for "Marcus Welby, M.D."

Source of cruise fire unknow

Associated Press

MIAMI — An investigator Wednesday discounted initial suggestions that the fire on the cruise ship Ecstasy started in the ship's laundry, saying the source of the blaze that spread to nylon ropes was still unknown.

A Coast Guard commander, meanwhile, commended the liner's captain, saying he cooperated with directions from shore after initially believing his own crew could handle the fire. The blaze brought an abrupt end to a four-day cruise from Miami to Mexico.

Early Wednesday, wind gusting up to 50 mph nearly tore the fire-damaged Carnival Cruise Line ship from its moorings. Several tugs had to help keep the 70,367-ton ocean liner in place at a pier after all but one of its lines broke, said Coast Guard Lt. Cmdr. Jeff Ruvolo. The wind also knocked out power to 23,000 homes.

Carnival's president said Tuesday he thought a welder's spark in the ship's laundry room may have ignited lint in air-conditioning vents and touched off the fire, which spread to nylon ropes at a mooring station on an open deck at the stern.

Fire doors isolated the blaze and the air-conditioning system was shut down to cut the fire's oxygen supply, company president Bob Dickinson said.

But a National Transportation Safety Board marine accident investigator said Wednesday that evidence uncovered so far didn't prove anything.

"There have been no signs of fire in the ship laundry area. There have been some signs of heat and smoke damage," said Jim Scheffer.

He said investigators were still trying to determine the origin of the fire at the mooring station.

Of the nearly 3,500 people on board, 54 were treated for minor injuries, most for smoke inhalation. One had a heart problem. Twenty were taken to hospitals.

The Ecstasy's captain, Vittori Sartori, has come under scrutiny since the fire, but Coast Guard Cmdr. William Uberti said the 71-year-old officer was completely cooperative from the outset.

Sartori, who has 51 years at sea, agreed when he was told to move the burning ship to an anchorage two miles offshore, Uberti said.

"He didn't argue with me," Uberti said.

Sartori initially thought his crew could handle the fire.

"As the flames got bigger and bigger, we called him again," Uberti said. "That's when he said he could use some help."

The Coast Guard sent tugs to spray water on the flames shooting out of the mooring area.

Passengers said they had complained of smoke coming through cabin vents long before they were told of the fire. Carnival spokesman Tim Gallagher said the first internal alarm sounded at 5:20 p.m. Monday.

Dale Palmer, a banker also from Union, S.C., said she told a steward at 4:40 p.m. that smoke was entering her cabin through the air-conditioning duct, and the steward came to her cabin to see it for himself.

"I'm disturbed when I see the president of Carnival on TV saying the fire started (later) when I know better. I reported it," she said.

Others complained about their treatment after reaching land.

Doyle Crocker, from Union, S.C., had to leave his wallet and about $2,000 cash in his cabin.

after being passed word of the astronaut's death.

Daniel Goldin, the current administrator of NASA, said Shepard's first flight inspired the generation that is now running America's space program.

Goldin, then in college, said Shepard's first flight "made a whole bunch of us engineers excited about the space program.

"His flight was a tremendous statement about tenacity, courage and brilliance," said Goldin. "He crawled on top of that rocket that had never before flown into space with a person aboard and he did it. That was an unbelievable act of courage."

Only four of the original seven Mercury astronauts are now living: Gordon Cooper, Glenn, Scott Carpenter and Walter Schirra.

Shepard spent 33 hours on the moon during the third landing mission and became the only lunar golfer, playfully whacking golf balls with a six-iron. On that flight, Shepard, Edgar Mitchell and Stuart Roosa spent nine days in space; Mitchell and Shepard stayed on the moon for two days.

Years later, in a book on the space program he co-wrote with fellow astronaut Donald K. Slayton, Shepard said that when he finally reached the moon, he was so touched by the beauty and the fragility of Earth that he wept.

Mitchell said all the Apollo astronauts were extraordinary, but even in that group "Alan had something special. He was chosen because he was very, very competent."

Although Soviet cosmonaut Yuri Gagarin beat Shepard into space by 23 days, Shepard's 1961 flight marked the beginning of the U.S. manned space program. He prophetically called that first flight "just the first baby step, aiming for bigger and better things."

Less than three weeks after Shepard's flight, on May 25, 1961, President Kennedy set the nation's goal of landing a man on the moon by the end of the decade.

Asked 30 years later how he hoped to be remembered, Shepard said: "I only hope they spell my name right."

Shepard was a native of Derry, N.H., and son of a banker.

He graduated from the U.S. Naval Academy in 1944 and saw World War II action in the Pacific aboard the destroyer Cogswell. He earned his aviator's wings after the war and became a test pilot before his astronaut selection.

His awards include the Medal of Honor, for space, in 1979.

Shepard is survived by his widow, Louise, two daughters and six grandchildren.

the age of 8, Miller became interested in traditional jazz music. When he was 12 he started collecting jazz music tapes.

Miller joined his first group when he was 13 and played at an annual festival. At 18 he toured with a band to California and in various European countries, including France, Germany and Sweden.

In 1963, Miller started the Salt City Saints jazz band.

From there he moved on to the University of Utah, taking the band project with him.

Even though the band membership has changed over the years, their style has remained the same: pure, traditional jazz.

"Traditional jazz sheet music totally disappeared, not like classical music, which has stayed around for centuries, so we were fortunate to get transcripts of old records to work with," Miller said.

Miller has scored traditional jazz world premieres.

He has also performed with the Utah Symphony and the Colorado Springs Symphony.

The Salt City Saints have performed at many parades, including Days of '47 Parade, Freedom Festival, Utah Arts Festival, Park City Arts Festival and Bountiful Handcart Days Parade.

"The Salt City Saints have proved very popular with BYU in the past," said Cheryll May, director of Public Programs and Volunteer Programs for the Museum of Art.

"They really exemplify New Orleans traditional jazz," May said.

Tonight, weather permitting and as long as it does not disturb students who are studying, Miller hopes to spend some of the concert time playing in parade style around the BYU campus.

Doc Miller and the Salt City Saints will also be selling CDs of their music at the concert.

During their stay in Guatemala the family had to travel two hours from Quetzaltenango to the nearest town daily. A typical day for the Wilsons consisted of traveling to 10 towns a day to teach music lessons.

"The people were so accepting and appreciative. They were thrilled to be able to play the tunes they were learning," Linda said.

Mrs. Wilson recounted the time when the family arrived two hours late in a town because their driver had taken a wrong turn. Eager Guatemalans still awaited them when the family finally found their way to the town.

"They have so little opportunity with music that they are so grateful for any opportunity," Linda said.

Besides teaching music lessons, the family also conducted missionary musical firesides in 14 stakes.

There was an estimated audience of 4,000 to 5,000 people who attended the music concerts.

More than 80 missionary discussions were arranged from just two of the 14 concerts staged, Linda said.

"I think teaching music lessons was a great idea because it is a good way to open up the church to outsiders. It is a good trust-building project because it helps the church build a good impression," said Chris Taysom of Bloomington, Ind., who served a mission in Guatemala.

Taysom said many of the locals he met in Guatemala had a desire to learn, and that music was one of their interests.

Art gallery features BYU photographer

By JENNY STATHIS

BYU's university photographer is displaying a selection of his work at SCERA Art Gallery through July 31.

Mark A. Philbrick is featuring several of his favorite sports images, as well as photos from his travels.

"My job allows me to see the best that the university has to offer. I'm constantly working with researchers who are on the cutting edge of their fields of discipline," Philbrick said.

His work has taken him to all corners of the earth — to the rain forests of Samoa, to ancient Egyptian graveyards and to old civilizations buried in the jungles of Guatemala. He has also traveled with several of BYU's performing groups to Russia, China and throughout Europe.

"Each place I've visited has its own history. I've loved every place I've been to," Philbrick said. "There's beauty everywhere."

Despite his photography shots abroad, Philbrick is best known for his action photography.

"I have shot hundreds of thousands of sports photographs. The key is being at the right place at the right time and being quick and decisive," he said.

Philbrick's work has been published in many major newspapers throughout the country, as well as Sports Illustrated, National Geographic and Parade. His pictures have also earned him the title of "Photographer of the Year" three years in a row with the University Photographers Association of America.

Philbrick's photographs, all related to BYU, were chosen to be featured at SCERA by President Norm Nielsen.

"Some of you may be familiar with his work because we highlight his prints during a slide presentation prior to showing our movies. We are honored he has agreed to show in our gallery," Nielsen said.

Assistant to the President April Wetzel said, "We've worked with Mark before, and he always gives us great choices for photos. He doesn't do a lot of shows, and we wanted to show the community what he has to offer," she said.

"Photography has given me opportunities I could never have received any other way," Philbrick said. "I have met queens, kings and presidents — nothing I could have anticipated when I began working at BYU as a student. My job is to put the university in the best light we can. With my photography, I consistently look for the better side of people."

SCERA Art Gallery is at 745 S. State in Orem. It is open Monday through Saturday from noon to 9 p.m

After coming off their best season ever, the BYU men's gymnastic team is hoping to place two of its top athletes on the United States National team.

"We have two boys from BYU who will try to qualify for the national team," said Mako Sakamoto, coach of the men's gymnastic team. "They are Courtney Bramwell on the steel rings and Guard Young who is trying to qualify as an all-arounder."

The meet will be held at Arizona State University on Saturday.

"It is a regional meet," Bramwell said of the competition. "There four regionals all over the count and we will be going to Arizona. I a qualifying meet for the U National team."

Young, a junior from Oklaho City, is looking forward to the mee

"I went to the Winter Nationals l February and placed sixth," You said. "It was like a pre-nationals me. I love competing. I'm rea excited."

is the U.S. top hammer thrower, and her future looks very bright."

Mihaela Melinte of Romania took first place in the event. She set a new world record with a throw of 72.64 meters.

Palmer, who set an American record in the hammer throw last April, will now train for the 2000 Olympics.

BYU's Courtney Meldrum, Tara Hayes and Elizabeth Jackson also competed in the games, running in the 3,000 meter steeple chase.

While the three runners had frustrating runs, finishing sixth, seventh, and eighth, they learned from the experience.

Jackson was in medal contention when on the third lap she hit her leg on a barrier and fell down. With all of the attention on her, Jackson was determined not to give up. Shane, who was in attendance at the games, said that it was an incredible experience.

"She had such a spirit about her to not quit," Shane said. "She was going to be last, but she finished the race. I was really proud of her. She made the best of the situation."

As Jackson crossed the finish line, though she was last, the crowd cheered loudly.

Poole was excited with the athletes performances.

"They represented the University extremely well," Poole said. "The program is producing good athletes, and helping them reach their maximum. It shows other athletes that BYU has a top program, and our future is bright."

will be introduced as the w coach Thursday, a source the organization told The d Press, speaking on condi-nonymity. Floyd arrived in on Wednesday morning, a few hours after resigning at Iowa State.

"I really can't comment any further right now," Floyd said. The Bulls also refused to confirm Floyd's hiring.

Iowa State athletic director Gene Smith said Floyd was leaving "to pursue another opportunity with the Chicago Bulls." Asked if Floyd would be the coach, Smith said: "You're going to have to ask the Chicago Bulls about that."

As the Bulls' coach-in-waiting the past two years, Floyd's hiring hardly comes as a surprise. But Jordan's dislike of Floyd is no secret, either, saying just last week that he wouldn't play for him.

Jordan won't make an official announcement about his future until the NBA lockout ends, and Floyd's hiring won't change that, said David Falk, Jordan's agent. The NBA lockout bars the Bulls — and their new coach — from having any direct contact with Jordan.

several times a week, in and evening.

Completion of the class dismisses the citation and makes it so the citation does not show up on personal driving records, Adams said.

"It makes it so that insurance won't go up because of a citation," said Provo police Sgt. Alan Kuchar.

According to a bail schedule, violators must take action within two weeks of receiving the citation or by the due date given on the citation. Failure to do so may result in an arrest warrant being issued for, with the possibility of additional fines or late penalties.

Kuchar said many BYU students have taken advantage of traffic school.

David Dayton, a film major from Santa Clara, Washington County, said he got a double ticket at 1:30 a.m. on July 4 for speeding and not stopping at a stop sign. Each ticket was for $57.

Of traffic school, Dayton said, "It wasn't boring; you always learn a few new rules."

Kuchar said he tries to make people better drivers and to make it interesting.

During the class, students see clips of major accidents and rollovers where the importance of seatbelts is stressed.

Students watch a video of a police car cruising on University Avenue with its siren on.

From the film it is clear that many Provo motorists don't follow state law by pulling over to the right side of the road when a police car flashes its lights.

In Kuchar's class, he talks about speeding.

"For speed to do you any good, you've got to have distance. Speeding to St. George you'll get there quicker; ... around Provo it's only going to save you a few seconds," Kuchar said.

Kuchar also goes over school bus passing laws and railroad laws. He said the biggest cause of accidents is rear-end collisions because of following too close.

Some violations disqualify a person from traffic school.

"An accident, or going 20 miles over the speed limit (disqualify)," Adams said.

fraid that the sea, the waves, will come again," Kaiyus Rome said Wednesday as he tied a nylon tarp to a twig frame to fashion a roof. "We don't want to go back down. We'll stay here. We'll build a new house."

The village, which began as a makeshift refugee camp, doesn't have a name yet. "We just call it 'the mountain,'" resident Clara Asupot said.

Other camps also are becoming more permanent, replacing villages swept right off an 18-mile stretch of northwestern coastline.

Only 2,500 to 3,500 of the nearly 10,000 people who had lived in the disaster zone were known to have survived. Many remained missing Wednesday and were feared dead.

Beneath a cloudy sky and over the rumble of thunder, a priest said prayers Wednesday for those who died.

The Rev. Leo Ahanotu, a Nigerian Roman Catholic missionary, put down his small aluminum attache case, opened it and removed the tools of his trade: a white robe, two small silver goblets and a bottle of wine.

"We will pray for the souls of our lost brothers," Ahanotu said before the Mass.

Academy, feels confident about his chances of making the U.S. team.

"I'm hoping that I do well," Young said. "I feel pretty good. I'm going to have to have a good meet."

Although Young will be competing in all six events, he said he is excited about competing on the parallel bars.

"I'm looking forward to working on the p-bars," Young said.

Young is entering his third year as a Cougar and is excited about the team's progress and future.

"There are a lot of better programs than BYU's," Young said. "It is a growing program here. So it's been really fun to be a part of something that you can actually mold and help grow. We took fifth at nationals last year and hope to improve this season."

Bramwell, a junior form Lewisville, Idaho will try to qualify on the steel rings.

"I'd like to qualify for the nationals," Bramwell said. "This meet puts everyone in their place. It is to see who they want to put on the U.S. team. I think I have a pretty good chance for the team. I'll just do my best and have fun."

Bramwell has enjoyed his career at BYU.

"The team and the coaching has been really great," Bramwell said. "We just come in here and have a lot of fun. We pretty much know what we have to get done, so we just come in and do it."
